Most cats love tuna, and an occasional tuna treat is fine for them, but too much tuna can cause some serious medical problems. We're speaking here of tuna that is marketed for human consumption: most tuna-flavored cat foods are not 100% tuna, and contain nutrients such as added vitamins and taurine which are necessary for a cat's health.

I give her hard food and soft food... She threw up the soft food, it came in the Wiskas Seafood mix box. (She's been eating this for like 4 months now and has never gotten sick.) I cleaned her bowl and put some fresh food in it when I got home, but she wouldn't touch it. I am taking the rest of the food back, and I am just going to start giving her 1/4 can of Tuna in the mornings and at night.
